

Sara Holtman, RN, BSN, MHA, CWS, WCC

High-quality education is crucial in any industry, and this is especially true in the wound care community. Whether it's continuing education to stay current on industry trends or a certification course, a great instructor can significantly impact a student's success. Wound Care Certified (WCC) professionals take on many roles, from working with patients at the bedside to training the next generation of wound care experts.

Meet Sara Holtman, the Director of Clinical Education for WoundCentrics. She became a WCC in 2022. Sara began her career as an LVN for the Department of Veterans Affairs in 2009 and has since earned her RN, BSN, and a master's degree in healthcare administration. Sara is currently managing the education and training for WoundCentrics through Wound Care University.

What started as an internal training program for WoundCentrics clinicians has now expanded to offer career advancement opportunities to healthcare professionals outside the organization. By broadening this training program, Sara and her team are making a significant positive impact on the wound care community. Successful completion of the Wound Care Certification Prep Course allows students to sit for the WCC examination, ensuring more clinicians are well-trained to improve patient outcomes.

Sara will also be speaking at the Wild on Wounds conference in Phoenix, AZ, this August. She will conduct a session on the "Successful Use of Measure-vention in Prevention of HAPI's" alongside Dr. Marcus Gitterle. They will share remarkable results from the implementation of Measure-vention. During the 20 months of monitoring, stage III, stage IV, and unstageable pressure injuries fell to zero reportable events!

NAWCO is proud to have outstanding WCCs like Sara, who make a positive impact on the wound care community. Thank you, Sara, for your dedication to training the next generation of wound care professionals.
